1 INTRODUCTION

1.1 Purpose of Hydrological Analysis

The application of direct rainfall to a 2D model domain is a fairly novel approach to assess flood risk. One advantage of the approach is that the model does not require estimation of flow at discrete locations since flow is automatically generated from the incident rainfall according to the way in which it is channelled by the modelled topography.

Whilst the direct rainfall model explicitly simulates the channelling and pooling of surface water, losses to the ground through infiltration are not immediately accounted for. Such a scenario – in which no infiltration losses are represented – could be assumed to be indicative of a frozen or highly saturated catchment response. However this is a very conservative assumption and hence it is desirable to include a measure of infiltration losses in the model to make it more representative.

The role of the hydrological analysis, therefore, was primarily to inform the scale of infiltration losses to be incorporated in to the hydraulic model. To do this, the 2D model was run iteratively for a number of estimated infiltration losses before comparing the model output with fluvial flow estimates determined by Flood Estimation Handbook (FEH) techniques on specific subcatchments. The FEH techniques account for infiltration losses either implicitly (in the case of the statistical method) or explicitly (using ReFH) and hence were considered to provide an indicative estimate of the infiltration loss that was yet to be included within the 2D model.

By undertaking this exercise, the hydrological analysis indirectly took on a secondary purpose of ensuring that the catchment response simulated by the direct rainfall model was comparable to design flood estimates obtained from FEH methodology. This secondary objective was not insignificant given that the FEH suite of techniques are recommended by the Environment Agency and represent the current best practice guidance for undertaking flood estimates on catchments within the UK. It was therefore felt that agreement with FEH estimates for the specific subcatchments where the comparative analysis was undertaken would serve to improve the credibility of the modelling approach and provide added confidence to the results determined by the study.

The objectives of the hydrological analysis are therefore summarised as follows:

- To estimate the scale of infiltration losses within the extent of the study area to be incorporated within the direct rainfall model,
- (ii) To ensure the direct rainfall model output is consistent with FEH estimates of fluvial peak flows.

2 STUDY AREA

TUFLOW models were used to represent the 2D domain of the study area with a grid square resolution of 5m. The topography of the model domain was based on 1m LiDAR data coverage of Cambridge supplied by the EA. The area included within the 2D model domain is illustrated in Figure 1 and Figure 2.

In order to expedite the hydraulic model simulation times, the domain was split in to two discrete models corresponding to the north and south sides of the River Cam:

- (iii) The North model covers an area of 23km², extending to include the residential estate of Milton to the north, and as far as the M11 in the west.
- (iv) The South model extends south to encompass the residential area around Cherry Hinton, enveloping a total area of 31km<sup>2</sup>.

Dividing the model in this way also made sense scientifically to reflect the distinct differences in the underlying geology either side of the Cam, as described in Section 2.1

2.1 Geology

The geology map of Cambridge<sup>1</sup> indicates that the alignment of the River Cam follows a geological boundary dividing a region of Upper Greensand & Gault in the North and a region of Lower Chalk to the South of the Cam.

Although the width of the Upper Greensand & Gault band is narrow, it dominates the geology of North Cambridge before it dips in a south-easterly direction beneath the newer Lower Chalk. The Chalk sequence (Lower, Medium and Upper) is a prominent feature of East Anglia, extending east from Cambridge as far as Stowmarket.

2.2 Hydrology

The hydrological response of subcatchments enveloped by the 2D domain is expected to reflect the markedly different underlying geology north and south of the Cam.

Catchment descriptors obtained in the North from the FEH CD-ROM (v3) suggest a typical Baseflow Index (BFI) of around 0.35. BFI varies between 0 and 1, with 0 corresponding to a completely impermeable catchment and 1 denoting an exceptionally permeable catchment. A value of 0.35 indicates that the catchment response in the North will be relatively high; with limited infiltration losses.

The typical BFI value in the South is around 0.9 or higher; characteristic of highly permeable Chalk catchments in which infiltration losses are likely to be substantial. Indeed, soakaway tests undertaken in Cherry Hinton at Netherhall School<sup>2</sup> (shown in Figure 3) indicate the infiltration rate at two boreholes (BH1 and BH2; of depth 2m) stabilising at approximately 17mm/hr, based on permeability equations.

The response of the South is hence expected to be somewhat more subdued than the North, as a result of the buffering effect of the highly permeable Chalk. Although in reality the nature of the rural catchment response in both the North and South will be significantly influenced by the degree of urbanisation and the design of the subsurface drainage network.

3 METHODOLOGY

3.1 Adopted Approach

In order to satisfy the objectives outlined in Section 1.1, it was decided that design flood peak flows from FEH techniques would be would be estimated for two catchments – the Bin Brook in the North and the Vicar's Brook in the South – for comparison with the output from the direct rainfall model, initially without any infiltration losses included. The selection of these watercourses is discussed further in Section 3.2 below.

It was hoped that the FEH peak flows would be lower than the corresponding model output for a given flood event, and that this difference in flood peaks could be assumed to be attributable to infiltration losses; which could subsequently be applied to the rural areas of the model domain to improve the representation of further simulations. Inclusion of infiltration losses to the model domain has the combined effect of making the model more physically sound, and also serves to bring the runoff estimates from the direct rainfall model in line with the FEH estimates derived on the two catchments.

The FEH flow estimates would be compared with results from the model without the inclusion of the subsurface drainage network. In this way it was hoped that the comparison would be largely representative of a rural hydrological response, and hence losses could be assumed to be attributable to infiltration to the ground. This approach was adopted in preference to trying to account for the urban effect on runoff within the FEH methodology as this is inherently inaccurate given the heterogeneity of urban drainage networks (which are not adequately accounted for by empirical equations) and hence not recommended as good practice. Once estimates of the infiltration losses have been estimated and assigned to the rural areas within the model domain, the urban drainage network would be added to the model.

It was decided that the design flood event used as the basis for assessing the infiltration losses would be a 1-in-200 year storm of four hours duration. The return period of 1-in-200 years is the standard requirement of the SWMP legislation and ensures consistency with the first and second generation surface water flood maps produced by JBA. The choice of the storm duration is more subjective, and broadly corresponds to the estimated critical storm duration for the study area.

The steps carried out to undertake this approach are summarised as follows:

- Identify the proportion of the selected catchments which are included within the 2D model domain, and with which an appropriate comparison between model and FEH derived peak flows can be made.
- (ii) Determine 'catchment descriptors' for the two subcatchments based on FEH guidance<sup>3</sup>.
- (iii) Undertake FEH statistical and ReFH techniques on the subcatchments, as appropriate, for the 1-in-200 year storm of four hour duration.
- (iv) Run the direct rainfall model with the 1-in-200 year storm profile of four hour duration, including PO lines in the 2D domain from which hydrographs can be output at the downstream extent of the Bin Brook and Vicar's Brook.
- (v) Compare the hydrographs from the direct rainfall model with the peak of the quickflow component of the FEH derived estimates, recognising that baseflow is not represented within the hydraulic model.
- (vi) Estimate an appropriate infiltration loss for each subcatchment approximated as a percentage loss of rainfall and apply these losses to the rural domain of the model
- (vii) Re-run the direct rainfall model iteratively with various infiltration losses to gain

improved agreement with the FEH estimated quickflow peaks.

Once infiltration losses are confirmed for the North and the South, integrate the subsurface drainage network to the 2D domain to allow for this urban effect within the direct rainfall model.

3.2 Selected Subcatchments

(viii)

The two subcatchments identified for assessing infiltration losses were the Bin Brook and the Vicar's Brook, in the North and South respectively; the location of which are shown in Error! Reference source not found.

The Bin Brook and Vicar's Brook were chosen because they both represented relatively well defined watercourses in the context of the study area being considered, and this aided the delineation of the respective catchment boundaries for comparison with the FEH CD-ROM. Furthermore, both catchments are relatively rural; again in the context of the study area which is predominantly heavily urbanised.

Moreover, in light of the notable difference in the underlying geology between the North and South, and the influence this is likely to have on the characteristic hydrological response in both areas, the selection of a watercourse either side of the River Cam will allow losses the be assessed separately for the North and the South. In this way the Bin Brook and the Vicar's Brook can be viewed as sample subcatchments assumed to be representative of the hydrological nature of the North and South areas respectively.

3.3 Assumptions & Limitations

Modelling is by definition a simplification of real-world processes. Whilst the approach outlined in Section 3.1 was drawn up to make the direct rainfall model as representative as possible, it should always be recognised that every modelling study has limitations and requires certain assumptions to be made.

A number of assumptions and limitations relevant to this study are outlined below:

- (i) It is assumed that the 5m grid resolution used to define the 2D domain gives an adequate representation of available depression storage within the subcatchment such that additional losses can be attributed to infiltration.
- (ii) It is recognised that a percentage reduction in rainfall is not a physically realistic representation of losses due to infiltration. This representation is likely to underestimate infiltration losses at the start and end of the storm, and overestimate losses during the peak storm intensity. In reality infiltration rates will vary with antecedent conditions, and are likely to progressively reduce throughout the storm duration as soil moisture capacity becomes saturated. In this study the simplification to a percentage reduction allows for ease of communication, and is consistent with the approach undertaken in the first and second generation surface water flood maps facilitating the comparison with these previous studies.
- (iii) By selecting the Bin Brook and Vicar's Brook subcatchments for assessment of infiltration losses it is assumed that their hydrological response is representative of the rural North and South areas, respectively. As such it is assumed that losses calculated for these catchments are transferable to the rural areas across the North and South model domains.
- (iv) It is recognised that the effect of urbanisation upon the hydrological response of a catchment is not solely accounted for by the subsurface drainage network. Roads, for example, will create preferential flowpaths which direct and speed up runoff. Therefore the pre- drainage network model scenario is not strictly a rural catchment representation, nevertheless it is assumed to be appropriate for comparison with the FEH flow estimation techniques for rural catchments.

4 ANALYSIS – NORTH CAMBRIDGE

4.1 Subcatchment Definition

Catchment descriptors were obtained from the FEH CD-ROM (v3) for the Bin Brook at the downstream extent of the catchment where it is confluent with the River Cam (NGR: TL, 446,589). The catchment delineation was cross referenced with OS mapping to ensure its accuracy, and subsequently a new set of catchment descriptors were calculated for that portion of the catchment included within the hydraulic model. Additionally, the area of the modelled subcatchment was also checked against the area identified by the flow vector field within the hydraulic model.

Table 4-1 summarises the key catchment descriptors for the subcatchment included within the hydraulic model.

Catchment Descriptor	Definition	Modelled Subcatchment
AREA	Catchment drainage area (km²)	3.2
BFIHOST	Baseflow index derived from the HOST classification <sup>4</sup> . Varies between 0 (impermeable) and 1 (permeable)	0.38
SPRHOST	Standard Percentage Runoff derived from the HOST classification (%)	52
DPSBAR	Mean drainage path slope (m/km)	12.0
SAAR	Standard Average Annual Rainfall (mm)	552
FARL	Index of Flood Attenuation from Reservoirs and Lakes. Varies between 0 and 1, where 1 corresponds to no attenuation.	0.98
URBEXT <sub>2000</sub>	Index of Urban Extent, based on Land Cover Map (LCM2000) data <sup>5</sup>	0.17

Table 4-1: Bin Brook subcatchment catchment descriptors

The catchment descriptor summary indicates that the modelled subcatchment corresponds to approximately 20% of the total catchment area of 17.5km², and exhibits a BFIHOST value typical of the North.

Noteworthy parameters include the mean subcatchment slope of 12m/km which reflects the low-lying flat relief, and which will somewhat reduce the speed surface runoff. It is also important to note that whilst the Bin Brook subcatchment is considered relatively rural in the context of Cambridge city centre, its URBEXT<sub>2000</sub> value of 0.17 falls within the FEH classification of "heavily urbanised". It is worth re-iterating therefore that whilst the subsurface drainage network has not been included within the hydraulic model to carry out the infiltration analysis, the inclusion of roads and buildings within the 2D domain will have some influence on the 'rural' subcatchment runoff being simulated.

4.2 Peak Flow Estimation

At 3.2km<sup>2</sup>, the modelled subcatchment does not lend itself well to the FEH statistical method, in which gauged data from hydrologically similar catchments are pooled to determine a statistical relationship. This is because nationally there are relatively few gauged catchments of such small size, and hence the pooled data can end up being a poor representation of the hydrology at the subject site.

It was decided therefore that both statistical and ReFH techniques would be undertaken for the whole catchment, which is larger and for which the statistical method was thought to be more appropriate. In this way it was hoped that the benefit of including gauged data within the statistical method would provide an adjustment factor (if appropriate) to the peak flows given by the ReFH model; which could then be used to generate flow estimates from the smaller subcatchment.

4.2.1 Bin Brook - Whole Catchment

Flow estimates from the statistical method were informed by using a donor gauge on the Bumpstead Brook at Broad Green (EA ref: 36010) to adjust the empirical estimate of QMED (the median, or 1-in-2 year index flood event) with reference to recorded local data. The resultant flow estimates were compared to those given by ReFH using a critical storm duration of 11.5 hours. The flow estimates from both techniques up to the 1-in-100 year return period are summarised below in Table 4-2.

Return Period (years)	Statistical Method	ReFH Method
2	2.5	3.1
5	3.9	4.1
10	4.8	4.8
20	5.7	5.6
50	6.9	6.8
75	7.4	7.4
100	7.7	7.9

Table 4-2: Peak flow estimates (in m<sup>3</sup>/s) for the Bin Brook whole catchment

The results show that there is a very good agreement between the peak flows estimated from the two techniques; even at the higher return periods. For return periods above 1-in-100 years, it is recommended that the ReFH growth curve is applied in both cases, and hence floods of greater severity than the 1-in-100 year event will also be in close agreement. Given the close agreement between the two techniques, it was considered that there would be good confidence in using ReFH for estimating the response of the subcatchment, without the need to apply an adjustment factor

4.2.2 Bin Brook - Modelled Subcatchment

The ReFH model was applied to the modelled subcatchment, using a storm duration of 4.25 hours. This duration was adopted rather than four hours in order to maintain an odd number of 0.25 hour time-steps. The resultant peaks for both the total and quick flow hydrographs are summarised in Table 4-3 below.

Table 4-3: Peak flow estimates (in m<sup>3</sup>/s) for the modelled subcatchment on the Bin Brook

Return Period (years)	ReFH Total Flow	ReFH Quickflow
2	0.79	0.66
5	1.07	0.92
10	1.29	1.13

Return Period (years)	ReFH Total Flow	ReFH Quickflow
20	1.52	1.34
50	1.89	1.68
75	2.08	1.87
100	2.23	2.01
200	2.67	2.42

As previously mentioned, no allowance was made for the contribution of baseflow within the direct rainfall model. As such, the 1-in-200 year quickflow peak of 2.42m³/s was used as the basis for comparison with the simulated rural response from the modelled subcatchment.

4.3 Modelling Infiltration Losses

Land use across the 2D domain was defined using Mastermap classification data. From this dataset, impermeable surfaces such as land occupied by buildings or roads could be identified. For the direct rainfall model simulations, it was decided that infiltration losses would only be applied to those areas of the 2D domain which were not occupied by impermeable surfaces, such as gardens, parks and agricultural land.

The infiltration losses were then represented within the direct rainfall model by applying a constant percentage reduction to the depth of incident rainfall at each time-step during the 1-in-200 year four hour storm. The simulated output hydrographs from the direct rainfall model using infiltration losses of 10% and 15% are shown in Error! Reference source not found.

The above plot indicates that the direct rainfall model simulation with an infiltration loss of 15% generates a peak flow that is consistent with the quickflow estimate determined by ReFH. From this comparison it is concluded that an infiltration loss of 15% is a representative value for the Bin Brook subcatchment, and indicative of infiltration losses across North Cambridge.

5 ANALYSIS - SOUTH CAMBRIDGE

5.1 Subcatchment Definition

Catchment descriptors were obtained from the FEH CD-ROM (v3) for the Vicar's Brook at the downstream extent of the catchment where it is confluent with the River Cam (NGR: TL, 448,572). The catchment delineation was cross referenced with OS mapping to ensure its accuracy, and subsequently a new set of catchment descriptors were calculated for that portion of the catchment included within the hydraulic model. Given the homogeneity of catchment descriptors across the Vicar's Brook, the catchment descriptors from the whole catchment were adopted; with the exception of the AREA and URBEXT2000 parameters, which were calculated manually.

Table 5-1 summarises the key catchment descriptors for the subcatchment included within the hydraulic model.

Catchment Descriptor	Definition	Modelled Subcatchment
AREA	Catchment drainage area (km²)	4.5
BFIHOST	Baseflow index derived from the HOST classification <sup>6</sup> . Varies between 0 (impermeable) and 1 (permeable)	0.89
SPRHOST	Standard Percentage Runoff derived from the HOST classification (%)	12
DPSBAR	Mean drainage path slope (m/km)	20.6
SAAR	Standard Average Annual Rainfall (mm)	543
FARL	Index of Flood Attenuation from Reservoirs and Lakes. Varies between 0 and 1, where 1 corresponds to no attenuation.	1.0
URBEXT <sub>2000</sub>	Index of Urban Extent, based on Land Cover Map (LCM2000) data <sup>7</sup>	0.28

Table 5-1: Vicar's Brook subcatchment catchment descriptors

The catchment descriptor summary shows that the modelled subcatchment corresponds to approximately 40% of the total catchment area of 12km<sup>2</sup>, and exhibits a BFIHOST value typical of the South; reflecting the permeability of the underlying Chalk.

As in the North, it can be seen that the Vicar's Brook subcatchment is relatively flat, with an average gradient of around 20m/km. Similarly, its URBEXT $_{2000}$  value of 0.28 is again indicative of a "heavily urbanised" catchment in terms of FEH classifications.

5.2 Peak Flow Estimation

Given the high BFIHOST value of 0.89, application of the ReFH method for flood flow estimation is not recommended as this hydrological model was not calibrated for use on permeable catchments, for which it has been found to perform poorly<sup>8,9</sup>. Consequently, only the statistical method was adopted to estimate peak flows on the Vicar's Brook subcatchment.

5.2.1 Hydrometric Data at Swaffham Bulbeck

For the purpose of informing the statistical analysis, stage and flow time-series data was requested from the Environment Agency for the local river gauge on the Swaffham Lode at Swaffham Bulbeck, located only 10km northeast of Cambridge (EA ref: 33052; NGR: TL 552,628). The data quality at the gauge was considered to be good given that the historical flood events on record are all contained by the over-sized channel.

Upon further investigation however, it was identified that there was a great deal of uncertainty in the catchment area of the Swaffham Lode at the gauge. The catchment delineation on the FEH CD-ROM was not consistent with OS mapping, and indeed further uncertainty was introduced by the fact that the channel seems to disappear below ground in some areas; such is the permeability of the catchment.

In light of the considerable uncertainty in catchment area, unfortunately the gauge data could not be reliably used to inform the estimate of QMED (the median flood; with return period 1-in-2 years), however it was incorporated within the pooling group since the flood growth curve is not explicitly a function of catchment area.

5.2.2 Vicar's Brook - Modelled Subcatchment

A statistical pooling group was compiled for the Vicar's Brook, and the resulting flood growth curve was applied to a QMED estimate of 0.08m³/s derived empirically from the catchment descriptor values for the modelled subcatchment.

The estimated design flood peak flows are summarised in Table 5-2 below. It should be noted that these flows represent the combined quickflow and baseflow responses from the subcatchment, and as such they are not directly comparable with the model output, which only simulates quickflow. Since statistical flow estimates are not associated with a specific storm duration, it was assumed that the above estimates were applicable to the four hour storm being simulated in the model. As such, the 1-in-200 year total flow peak of 0.21m³/s was used as the basis for comparison with the simulated rural response from the modelled subcatchment.

5.3 Modelling Infiltration Losses

As detailed previously, land use across the 2D domain was defined using Mastermap classification data. From this dataset, impermeable surfaces such as land occupied by buildings or roads could be identified. For the direct rainfall model simulations, it was decided that infiltration losses would only be applied to those areas of the 2D domain which were not occupied by impermeable surfaces, such as gardens, parks and agricultural land.

The infiltration losses were then represented within the direct rainfall model by applying a constant percentage reduction to the depth of incident rainfall at each time-step during the 1-in-200 year four hour storm. The simulated output hydrographs from the direct rainfall model using infiltration losses of between 50% and 80% are shown in Error! Reference source not found.

The above plot indicates that an infiltration loss of between 50% and 60% is most appropriate for giving a simulated peak consistent with the FEH statistical method. Upon consideration, it was decided that an infiltration loss of 50% would be adopted for South Cambridge. This decision was based on the fact that, given the greater degree of uncertainty in estimating flood flows on permeable catchments, 50% represented a slightly more conservative estimate.

6 DISCUSSION OF RESULTS

The study has concluded that representative infiltration losses for use in the Direct Rainfall Model are 15% and 50% for North and South Cambridge, respectively. These values compare to the previous infiltration loss of 30% which was adopted nationwide for the Phase 2 Surface Water Flood Maps.

In terms of the credibility of the study, certainly it stands to reason that the infiltration loss in South Cambridge would be larger than in North Cambridge, due to the higher permeability of the underlying geology of the South. In this way the current study is considered to be a much better representation of the infiltration losses than the Phase 2 study, which did not account for any difference in the geology across Cambridge and assumed a uniform infiltration loss across the North and the South.

Having decided upon the infiltration losses, the implication is that the residual water is either stored on the catchment or contributing to runoff. Indicative estimates of percentage runoff for the two modelled subcatchments are provided by the SPRHOST catchment descriptors, which are approximately 50% and 10% for the Bin Brook and Vicar's Brook subcatchments, respectively. When the runoff values are added to the derived infiltration losses, it can be implied that the remaining water accounts that which is primarily held on the catchment in depression storage.

For both modelled subcatchments, the residual water assumed to be held with depression storage is approximately 40% of the incident rainfall. Indeed this should be represented by the definition of the catchment topography within the Direct Rainfall Model. In reality, this value of 40% also incorporates other losses from the catchment, including evaporation and also rainfall captured by trees which is subsequently lost through evapotranspiration.

Whilst the objective of this study was not to confirm accurate estimates of depression storage, which should be considered indicative, it is nonetheless reassuring that the estimated storage volumes are shown to be consistent between the two modelled subcatchments. Given the similar degrees of urbanisation on the two modelled subcatchments, and the average gradients, it is to be expected that storage volumes on the two subcatchments would be similar.

This consistency and sensibility of the results of the hydrological analysis give us confidence that the current study provides an accurate representation of the catchment hydrology, which will be of direct benefit to outcomes of the Cambridge SWMP.

7 CONCLUSIONS & RECOMMENDATIONS

The conclusions from the hydrological analysis undertaken to support the development of the Direct Rainfall Model for the Cambridge SWMP are presented as follows:

- (i) The primary objective of the hydrological analysis was to provide an informed estimate of the infiltration losses to be expected across the study area. A related and secondary objective was to ensure that the simulated outputs from the Direct Rainfall Model were consistent with Flood Estimation Handbook (FEH) derived peak flows.
- (ii) The study area of 54km² was split either side of the River Cam into North Cambridge (23km²) and South Cambridge (31km²) to facilitate the Direct Rainfall modelling. Dividing the study area in this way reflects the spatial variation in the underlying geology: the North is underlain by Upper Greensand & Gault, whilst the South is underlain by Chalk. As such the permeability of the South, and the associated infiltration losses, are expected to be higher than the North.
- (iii) Two 'sample' subcatchments were identified on which to compare the simulated catchment response to a 1-in-200 year four hour storm, with FEH derived peak flows: the Bin Brook in the North, and the Vicar's Brook in the South. Comparison of the peak flows on these subcatchments would indicate the degree of infiltration losses in the North and the South.
- (iv) Infiltration losses were applied to those portions of the 2D domain which were not impermeable surfaces (like roads and buildings), as defined by Mastermap data. Since FEH techniques are mainly applicable to rural catchments, it was decided that the subsurface drainage network would not be included in the Direct Rainfall Model to assess the infiltration losses. Although it was noted that the influence of the urban landscape – such as channelling of floodwater by roads – would affect the simulated response.
- (v) The subcatchment of the Bin Brook included within the 2D domain covers an area of  $3.2 \text{km}^2$ , approximately 20% of the whole catchment. The subcatchment of the Vicar's Brook covers an area of  $4.5 \text{km}^2$ , approximately 40% of the whole catchment. The BFIHOST values for the two subcatchments of 0.38 and 0.89 are indicative of the North and South areas respectively, and reflect the higher permeability of the underlying Chalk in the South.
- (vi) The ReFH method was used to derive a 1-in-200 year quickflow peak of 2.42m³/s on the modelled subcatchment. The statistical method was not used on such a small catchment as this, but had previously been shown to agree well with the ReFH method when compared to peak flow estimates from the whole Bin Brook. The Direct Rainfall Model was run for a variety of infiltration losses, of which a loss of 15% was found to give the best agreement with the ReFH estimate.
- (vii) On the Vicar's Brook, the ReFH method could not be used because it is not recommended for application on such permeable catchments. The statistical pooling group method gave a 1-in-200 year peak flow estimate of 0.21m³/s. Inspection of the results from the Direct Rainfall Model indicated that an infiltration loss of 50% would be most appropriate.
- (viii) The estimated infiltration loss values of 15% and 50% in the North and South respectively are consistent with the relative permeability of the underlying geology. These estimates are considered to be more representative than the nationwide infiltration loss of 30% adopted in the Phase 2 Surface Water Flood Mapping, which did not account for any variation in underlying geology across Cambridge.
